

I think the New Jersey "Do Not Call" should remain as is with no provision for telemarketers to call back after 18 months. It would be very inconvenient for the citizens of New Jersey to be put on a list to know that the "fix" is temporary that the calls will only end for a year and half. I didn't want telemarketing calls before and I know I will not want to have telemarketing calls 18 months from now. I want to know that when I pick up my phone, that it will be a voice I recognize and will want to talk to, and not some machine or some pushy telemarketers that won't even take a breath for you to tell them you're not interested. If I want to purchase goods I will shop on the internet and in the malls. I just wish that there was also a "Do Not Spam" registry.
